I for short, was an early World War II radar system developed by the British Army to provide information for anti-aircraft artillery. There were two upgrades, GL/EF (elevation finder) and GL Mk. II (pictured), both improving the ability to determine a target's bearing and elevation. GL refers to the radar's ability to direct the guns onto a target, known as gun laying. The first GL sets were developed in 1936 using separate transmitters and receivers mounted on gun carriages. Several were captured in 1940, leading the Germans to believe falsely that British radar was much less advanced than theirs. The GL/EF attachment provided bearing and elevation measurements accurate to about a degree: this caused the number of rounds needed to destroy an aircraft to fall to 4,100, a tenfold improvement over early-war results. The Mk. II, which was able to directly guide the guns, lowered the rounds-per-kill to 2,750.

rate is 4.7 dinars to the greenback. The sliding dinar may indicate that the impact of the central Bank of Libya (CBL) is starting to hit the economy more widely, which may further destabilise the major oil producer, according to Reuters. The dealers attributed the dinar's decline to a lack of dollars in the market as the crisis has stopped the CBL issuing letters of credit, a key tool of monetary policy and exchange and export transactions in Libya for years. Its economy also relies heavily on oil revenue, and factions in eastern Libya have blockaded most exports as a tactic in the dispute over the CBL, leading to force majeure being declared on oil fields and cutting office. the state's source of income. The Government of National Unity, based in Tripoli in western Libya, has said it expects the CBL to resume issuing letters of credit this week. The crisis began when Presidential Council chief Mohammed al-Menfi, based in Tripoli, last month announced he was replacing veteran central bank Governor Sadiq al-Kabir prompting pushback from eastern factions. Legislative bodies aligned with the two sides are conducting UN-backed consultations aimed at resolving the crisis but have not yet announced significant progress. While the crisis but have not yet announced significant progress. While the crisis continues, the CBL's access to international dollar markets appears limited. "The exchange price is volatile because no dollars are entering the country, and oil (exports), the only source of revenue in the country, have also stopped," said a black-market dealer. The dinar could drop further if the crisis drags on, he added. "There should be a solution very quickly because we, the citizens, are the only victim of the central bank crisis," said Hisham Mohamed, a 45-year-old father of five in Tripoli. aawsat.com The Libyan dinar has experienced a sharp decline in the black market, primarily driven by the ongoing leadership dispute within the Central Bank of Libya (CBL) and the halting of oil exports. The dinar's fall highlights growing concerns about Libya's fragile economy, which has long been under pressure due to political divisions and economic instability. On Monday, traders in Tripoli's black market reported that the dollar was trading at 7.95 Libyan dinars, a significant drop from the 7.36 dinars seen just a week earlier. This 8% depreciation comes as the official exchange rate remains fixed at 4.7 dinars per dollar, creating a widening gap between the official and black-market rates. The dip in the currency's value is closely tied to the central bank's inability to issue letters of credit, a crucial mechanism for enabling trade and managing foreign currency flows. With the leadership of the Central Bank of Libya in question, operations have largely stalled, and the flow of dollars into the Libyan market has significantly diminished This shortage has only been worsened by the interruption of oil exports, which constitute the backbone of the Libya, which have shut down major oil fields in protest over the central bank's leadership. As a result, Libya's ability to generate revenue has been severely compromised, with the declaration of "force majeure" on several oil fields signaling that the government cannot meet its export obligations. This reduction in dollar inflows has created a scarcity that is being felt acutely on the black market, where traders now face a surge in demand for foreign currency. One trader told Reuters, "The exchange rate is unstable because dollars are not flowing into the country and oil exports, our only revenue source, have stopped." This instability in the exchange rate has led to increased inflationary pressures, raising the cost of imported goods and amplifying the financial struggles of ordinary Libyans. The Central Bank of Libya, already hamstrung by the political crisis, is facing limitations in accessing international currency markets. Without the ability to leverage its reserves or bring in foreign capital, it has struggled to maintain the currency's value could drop even devastating effects on the livelihoods of millions of its citizens, and the continued erosion of the currency threatens to make the situation even worse. Until a resolution is found in the Central Bank's leadership struggle, and oil exports can be resumed, the economic pain will likely deepen, putting further pressure on the Libyan dinar. Tags: black
