It's thirty degrees in the shade (shadow?) Hi! I am wondering whether it is correct to say "it is thirty degrees in the shadow"? Thank you a lot! Please give us some context, mimicq. In what situation would you say this? For example, if you talk about the weather conditions. Say that I am on holiday. I am talking to you and I want to tell you what the temperature is. The shade is the area that is not in the sun, so it is cooler. We talk about temperatures in the shade. Shade is caused by many shadows. A shadow is a shape of one thing (a person, or tree, or house for example), where it is blocked from the sun. Thank you very much. I thought so, but I wanted to check it. Thanks "X degrees in the shade" is the normal collocation. I am not convinced that this fact can necessarily be deduced from a wider understanding of the difference between "shade" and "shadow"! The shade is caused by many shadows. A shadow is a shape of one thing (a person or tree, or house for example), where it is blocked from the sun. Looks like for Longman they are interchangeable. She was sitting in the shade to be cool. The shade doesn't have any particular shape. If it's long, it's tree-shaped, so it's the shadow of a tree. If all there is nearby to cast shadows (together with whatever comes from fences, houses etc. near them) are the shade. Say there are a few pine trees on a beach. It is a scorching hot day. Some people are trying to cool down. So I need to say: "There are a few people sitting in the shadow of pine trees?" It doesn't give the idea of cooling down? Right? I just put more attention to the shapes of the shadow of the trees? Or simply it doesn't make sesnse? / Forum SHOC.PL FAQ Szukaj Uytkownicy Grupy Rejestracja Zaloguj Album Chat Ogoszenie INFORMACJE Tematy Posty Ostatni post NASZE MASZYNY PROSIMY NIE UYWA WULGARYZMW W ADNEJ POSTACI Bank InformacjiOstatni post: serwiswki do Hondy Shad... First meaning that came to me was somewhat like gettare ombre in italian, that should be something like casting shadows in english, but I also may think this sentence to be related to the preceding one: But she can't be convicted to the shadows might actually be about she moving away. Moreover, I doubt about the correct translation and sense of the last line of the chorus: But she's always a woman to meas it may have two meanings in italian and both seem to make sense: Ma sempre una donna per me (I always consider her as a woman) Ma fa sempre la donna con me (She always behaves like a woman for me) Is anyone able to give any clue, please?ps: I am aware this post might be accounted as a two-question one, but consider that it's about one only song, anyway Facendo una piccola ricerca su Urban Dictionary ho trovato "throw shade" e credo che abbiano lo stesso significato. Ecco cosa dice: to talk trash about a friend or aquaintance, to publicly denounce or disrespect. When throwing shade it's immediately obvious to on-lookers that the thrower, and not the thrower, and not the same thing, as reported on the same page, by which we might deduce a shadow actually is the product of a shade. One more thing (I'm so sorry, but it's tricky song); convicted in:But she can't be convictedwould be better translated with persuasa or with condannata? And accordingly:might be translated with something like si guadagnata un diploma (meaning something like si guadagnata un diploma (meaning something like si guadagnata un diploma (meaning the reason why she behaves like this is not her fault and she can't be condamned by that)? "Shade" significa anche ombra, come puoi notare dal dizionario di WordReference. "Convicted" secondo me in questo caso significa "condannata", dato che in tutta la canzone parla di come le donne possano essere crudeli (non per essere conferme e/o smentite! Una che ha quel quid che annulla tutti i difetti possibili, e che la rende diversa dalle altre. Un po' la differenza tra la categoria delle donne e quella delle femmine: una donna tra le donne (mi fermo che ho riempito il vasino...). Sul convicted=condannata sono d'accordo, su earned her degree=avuto ci che voleva, non tanto; suonerebbe pi o meno:Ha avuto il suo premio (gli darei un senso di cosa non troppo voluta coscientemente)E il peggio che farSar dire male di teNon mi convince mica tanto... It's only a shadow - a misty-shaped replacement of whatever is truly real. Stated that AE stands for American English and not for Angel Eyes, we might say that throwing shadows at is somewhat similar to making fun of, the sense of the whole thing beingShe's (already) earned her degree (ha avuto il suo premio: she's had her own prize)And the worst that can happen to youIs she making fun of you or is degree better referred to the preceding part and translated with something like safe-conduct? Convicted: I think it means she won't be found guilty of (or held accountable for) all the mean, lousy things she's done because she's earned a degree (she's become really good at doing it.) "It" being acting in any number of different ways and treating people any way she wants to. She's become very proficient at these behaviors and she's given a pass on her shabby conduct by people. This isn't hard to understand. Lots of women in our society - no matter what country they live in - are given special treatment or are allowed to do things and treat people in all kinds of crappy ways, and yet they get away with it, usually because they're pretty and sexy. This song isn't about an ugly, undesirable woman. She has the feminine power of attraction. Inside, though, she's an ugly person. Well, to me, she is... To Billy Joel, she'll do just fine. I found this page/post from a Google search of the lyrics, as I just heard the meaning of "to throw shadows at you" is meant to be literal. What is a shadow? An ephemeral thing. What does it mean to throw a shadow? To throw something (an object to be substantial object. A surprise or reversal of the usual situation. This interpretation is supported by my reading of the complete lyrics. "The woman does something unexpected." Hence, I would translate the lyrics literally. Because, after all, even in English, the lyrics took me some time to figure out. I'd say that "to throw shade at someone", from "disrespect them", (higher register) "to disparage, to cast aspersions on them". Dear Native English Speakers, Could you please let me know what the meaning of "in a vain shadow" is? It is a title of book written by James Hadley Chase. Thanks Hello Cyrus The Great - welcome to WordReference Book titles are often enigmatic phrases that do not really make sense until you have read the book. Even then, they may not make sense. This title has no special cultural or idiomatic references that I am aware of. The phrase is a quote from a burial service in the Book of Common Prayer: "For man walketh in a vain shadow". There is a very similar passage in the King James version of the Bible (Psalms 39:6): "Surely every man walketh in a vain shew". Basically, the idea is, I believe, that a man walks through his life as a mere ghost, that his earthly existence is ephemeral. I am not sure if that's what Chase had in mind, though. Wow, Valvs! What an impressive contribution. Thanks. Thanks for your comments. Doesn't it mean that "under the cover of vanity"? The standard version of the Psalms (from the book of Common Prayer of 1662) used in most English churches until the late 20th century gives: 7. For man walketh in a vain shadow, and disquieteth himself in vain: he heapeth up riches, and cannot tell who shall gather them. Because of the use of the phrase in the psalms and the funeral service, it has resonance for many English people. Because we sang the psalms at school, and because I've been to funerals, I knew at once what the title referred to. This form of the psalms is much more familiar in BE than the translation you give, Valvs. Hello there, I have just read something about the origin of the expression "May your shadow never grow less". What is the origin of the expression, "May your shadow never grow less". An Oriental fable says that when students of the black art have made certain progress they are made to run through a subterranean hall, with the devil after them. If they run so fast that the devil can only catch their shadow, or part of it, they become first-rate magicians, but lose either all or part of their shadow. Therefore, the expression "May your shadow never grow less" means may you escape wholly and entirely from the clutches of the foul fiend (Source: 1,000 answers to 1,000 questions - 1884) Is the expression still common in the place where you live in? Have you ever heard or used it? And what do you think about its meaning? Thanks! I wasnt aware of it either. Its certainly not common in the UK. The OED actually states that its Persian phrase.] I don't think it has ever been common, but a friend of mine used to say "May your shadow never diminish"; I have no idea where he got it from. "May your shadow never grow less" appears in The Hobbit by JRR Tolkein (certainly I doubt he ever read The Hobbit), but he used it in the same joking manner as Tolkein did, obliquely referring to the other person's stoutness. I was just watching an episode of the comedy series Mind Your Language in which I heard the sentence your friend had said. The dialogue was said by an Indian student of the English class. Since in my mother tongue, Persian, we have the same expression, meaning to wish someone a long life, I wondered if the expression was translated literally to make a funny dialogue or if it was its equivalent in English, and Im led here. Last edited by a moderator: Dec 23, 2010 On SongMeanings (, it has the lines divided differently: "Shadow is burnt yellow" because of all the flashing of the cameras and her lashes are dry as well because of the constant light. They "dance and turn", but the turn indicates a break-up I think, since she's crying and her make-up is all smeary now. So by they, I mean the guy she was waiting for backstage in the last stanza. Hi, everyone! I am also reading the sentence in my book now, but I wonder how do you relate "symbolic shadow" with "beliefs and deeds ", as dermott said~ Thank you Martin Luther King gave this speech standing on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial.
